INTRODUCTION

China possessed the art of writing and produced literary works as early as the third millennium B.C. The materials used for writing at that time were bone, tortoise shell, and split bamboo stalks. Later came wooden tablets on which lines were drawn with a stylus. The writing began in the upper right-hand corner and ran vertically downward, the lines following one another from right to left. Except for the original copies or reprints of early works, this writing style has been replaced by a left to right and top to bottom pattern in People's Republic of China.

Unfortunately, almost no wooden manuscripts are still in existence. One major reason for this was an edict, issued by the first emperor of the Ch'ing (Qing) Dynasty, Ch'ing Shih-Lung (Qing Shihuang), in the year 213 B.C. to burn all books and bury several hundred Confucian scholars. This was done to punish authors who dared to criticize his political actions and to prevent the dissemination of those ideas against him. Only a few books escaped burning, and most wooden books that were produced thereafter were most likely destroyed by rot.

This book-burning and scholar-burying incident was then followed by a period of great literacy. Efforts were made to replenish the supply of books by seeking out and reissuing works of classical literature dating from the time of Confucius. Writing was no longer limited to wooden tablets, but was also done on silk cloth, either with a bamboo pen or a camel's hair brush.

The ink used was a black substance obtained from the varnish tree. Later, india ink was made with lampblack and glue. Silk possessed several of the properties of the Egyptian papyrus--it was pliable and had a smooth surface, but it was more expensive. Since silk materials were expensive, the ancient Chinese began making an entirely new material of silk rags that had been cut into small pieces and soaked to form a pasty mass that was then dried and became a sort of thin paper. However, this material was still too expensive to be widely used, so attempts were made to find something that was less costly. The search ended when Cai Lun invented paper, the first fiber paper in the world. During the year A.D. 105, Cai Lun succeeded in papermaking by using much cheaper substances as raw materials: tree bark, especially bast fiber from the mulberry tree, rags, old fishnets, and the underground part of hemp. This invention soon met with general acceptance, and in the next two centuries many manuscripts must certainly have been written on paper.

For almost 700 years the ancient Chinese were able to keep their method for producing paper a secret, but it was said that when Chinese papermakers were captured by the Arabs in the middle of the Eighth century, the process was discovered. From then on papermaking started its journey through the Arab empire, reaching Europe about the year 1100.

The art of producing multiple copies of a book by printing was, like the making of paper, first developed in China. As early as the second century A.D., impressions were believed to have been made from pages of text cut into a flat stone, the characters being sunk into it. Later the pages were carved in wood with the writing standing out in relief. Impressions could then be taken in large or small quantities from this wooden slab. The raised text was coated with coloring matter and a sheet of paper laid over it and pressed down to transfer the writing to the paper. The oldest known wood-block printing from China, in the form of a book, dates from the year A.D. 868, but the method was actually in use much earlier. Wood prints from Japan, which learned all of its bookmaking techniques from China, are known from as early as the Eighth century.

Printing from wooden slabs had continued for many years, even though in the 11th century the Chinese began making movable type from baked clay and later cut them from metal. Each single written character was cut as a separate block, and the pages of the book were made up by combining these blocks. When the printed impressions had been taken, the blocks could be separated and then reassembled to form new pages. Today, the movable technology is still used in China, although attempts have been made to produce Chinese printing using computers and some success has been achieved. In the event that the computerized printing technology is completely acceptable, the ancient movable printing technique will meet its end and will, no doubt, be enshrined in exhibits after enjoying more than one thousand years of glory

The moveable type idea is believed to be the same as the European discovery made by Johann Gutenberg of Germany in the 15th century. This brilliant idea has made a marvelous contribution to human civilization. One of the main incentives to the spread of printing within and without China may have been due to the everyday need for elementary sources of information.

China, an ancient country, has been an agricultural society for about 4,000 years. Likewise, the Chinese have been endowed with valuable agricultural expertise and production practices which have been passed down for generations. Their unique knowledge in this respect has been recorded in different media with various tools. The many Chinese successes in papermaking and printing technology were a great stimulus to the recording and printing of information and have enabled the extensive dissemination of agricultural information along the way. The earliest Chinese agricultural "books" are believed to be on the subject of "Shen nong (Shennong)" (Supernatural farming) and "Yeh lao (Yelao)" (Field man), and date back to over 2,000 years ago, that is, to the Warring States period in the Zhou Dynasty. Unfortunately, the books have been lost and only their names and some quotations survive. Up to the last empire, the Qing Dynasty, nearly every dynasty was glorified with its own agricultural books.

Some examples of the noted Chinese agricultural books are: Fan Shen Zhi Shu (Fan Sheng Chih Shu: A Book by Fan Sheng), a book on agricultural techniques, published in the first century B.C.; Qi Min Yao Shu (Chi-min Yao-Shu: Important Techniques for the Common People), a book on the methods of growing crops and processing of agricultural products by Jia Sixie (Chia Szu-hsieh), originally published in the late Wei Dynasty (6th century), which was the most complete and unique one during that period; Nong Shu (Nung Shu: A Book on Agriculture) by Wang Zhen (Wang Zhen) of the Yuan Dynasty (14th century), a work on agricultural techniques, originally published in 22 volumes; Nong Zheng Quan Shu (Nung Cheng Ch'uan Shu: A Comprehensive Book on Agricultural Politics by Xu Guanqi (Hsu Kuan-ch'i), a distinguished scientist in the Ming Dynasty (14th - 17th centuries), the work being an unprecedented one which covered agricultural administration and agricultural techniques, with over 700,000 Chinese characters; and Shou Shi Tong Kao (Shou Shih T'ung-K'ao: A Comprehensive Reference Book on Agriculture), an imperial compilation by Zhang Tingyu (Chang T'ing-yu) and others, originally published in 1742 in 78 volumes, containing quotations on agriculture from previous Chinese literature.

Some reprints of these ancient Chinese agricultural works are held by NAL. These, together with other Chinese materials, comprise NAL's Chinese collection of approximately 5,000 titles.

One might expect that the development of China's agricultural libraries would keep pace with the writing and publishing technology; however, the first agricultural library was not founded until the 1950's. Even now, there is no national agricultural library in the country. Agricultural libraries are scattered in several national and provincial agricultural academies, and agricultural universities or colleges. Extensive dissemination of agricultural information did not begin until the late 1950's, and then, mainly through libraries and information centers in all of the research and educational institutions that could provide lending; searching; reference services; document duplication; publishing; and so forth.

The present also brings into view some specialized private agricultural information brokers. Automation of agricultural libraries and information centers is under way in China. The dissemination of agricultural information, including ancient and modern agricultural literature, has helped greatly to stimulate the agricultural and technological improvement of the country. More and more people have been engaged in this service activity.

Chinese agricultural literature is one of the richest information sources in the world. Hence, Chinese materials merit further and more extensive study and use before their full potential for world progress can be known. The publishing of this bibliography is an attempt to disseminate a portion of this knowledge.

PREFACE

This bibliography was researched and compiled by Dr. Chen Qiubo, Deputy Director of the Technico - Scientific Research Institute, South China Academy of Tropical Crops, during his year as Visiting Scholar at the National Agricultural Library (NAL), 1987-88. Dr. Chen's work is comprehensive in its coverage of Chinese publications in the NAL collections. Earlier attempts to describe the Chinese literature at NAL were made by Dr. Leslie T.C. Kuo and Peter B. Schroeder in the early 1960's in four library lists: Communist Chinese Monographs in the USDA Library (Washington: U.S. Department of Agriculture Library, 1961); Communist Chinese Periodicals in the Agricultural Sciences (Washington: U.S. Department of Agriculture Library, 1960); Communist Chinese Periodicals in the Agricultural Sciences Rev. ed. (Washington: U.S. Department of Agriculture, National Agricultural Library, 1963); Oriental Serial Publications in the Zoological Sciences (Washington: U.S. Department of Agriculture, National Agricultural Library, 1963).

This bibliography is published in two volumes. Volume 1 includes approximately 3,000 citations to monographic and serial titles in the collection of the National Agricultural Library and is derived from records available in the AGRICOLA database, NAL's database of over 2.6 million citations to agricultural literature, as of December 1987. Volume 2 includes 1,250 additional citations to monographic titles not in the AGRICOLA database at the time. These retrospective titles were identified in the NAL card catalog, converted into machine readable form and are now available in AGRICOLA. In addition, NAL holds more than 600 retrospective serial titles which have been omitted from this bibliography since they were not in machine readable form at the time of publication. They are listed, however, in the printed Dictionary Catalog of The National Agricultural Library, 1862 - 1965 (New York: Rowman and Littlefield, 1965). The coverage of this bibliography is selective in that it consists primarily of those publications published in Chinese or about China from the People's Republic of China, the Republic of China, Hong Kong, or Macao.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The production of these volumes was a collaborative effort. Special thanks are extended to Elizabeth Goldberg, Head, Special Services Branch for coordinating the technical production of the bibliography and for providing editorial support. Gratitude is also extended to Dr. Alan Fusonie, Historian and Head of Special Collections, and for his staff members Judith Ho and William Hauser who researched older materials, all of whom showed great support and concern for the production of the bibliography. The assistance of Dr. Sarah E. Thomas and the staff of the Technical Services Division, in particular David Goldberg and Angela Lee, in coordinating the retrospective conversion of the older materials, the production of part 2 of this bibliography would have been impossible. And last, a special thank you to Gary McCone, Ed Warnick and Rose Broome of the Information Systems Division, who provided respectively, editorial assistance and the programming and systems support necessary to automate the production and printing of the bibliographies from machine readable records.
